WITH RICH CHOCOLATE FLAVOR. THE STRUGGLING YOUNG AUTHOR.

He Descants on the Piensures of Communi-cation With the Editor,

"Next to the pleasure of having your manuscript accepted," said the struggling young author, "is the pleasure of having it rejected. author, "is the pleasure of having it rejected. The declination is always couched in politic terms; it may be brief or it may be voluminous, but it is always politic. Sometimes they simply regret that they do not find it available and it is returned with thanks; sometimes they say that their rejection of it does not by any means necessarily imply that it is not good matter; it might hit somebody else plumb in the centre; but they themselves have got cords of just such material piled up in the cellar waiting until they start the fornace again. Still, try us awain; you may hit us yet, and we are always glad to examine manuscripts.

"At my time of life this is not depressing—it is pleasant to hold any sort of relationship with the editor; as I said at the outset, next to the pleasure of having your manuscript accepted is the pleasure of having it rejected; still I can imagine that the last is a pleasure of which one might get a surfeit."
